

The old shrine of human liberty inspires, in successive generations, the Spirit of 1776.

The Old Liberty Bell still rings out its message of patriotism to every listening American.

The American Government was born in the spirit of independence and self-reliance. With no army, no navy and scanty resources in men and money, the founders of the Nation declared in Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, July 4, 1776:

"That all men were created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

The great leaders of the Republican Party, which has controlled the Nation more years than any other party since the Nation was born, have ever shown themselves worthy to be the descendants of the sturdy, courageous man who founded it. No American has ever blushed with shame because of the action, or non-action of his Government, when a Republican occupied the Presidential chair.

AMERICA MUST BE FIRST

A nation, as able to do so as is the United States, is under obligation to protect itself.

It is hardly less important for a country to be industrially independent than for it to be politically independent. When the door to foreign commerce is closed by war it is necessary for a people to be able to maintain themselves. Unless they have the productive resources and the industrial strength vast armies and great navies must be without support.

The American system of protection means industrial preparedness, out of which, alone, can grow genuine, self-reliant, military preparedness. That system is a part of the settled policy of the Republican party.

IS A VOTE FOR the vigorous old-time American upholding of the rights of every American, everywhere, every time;

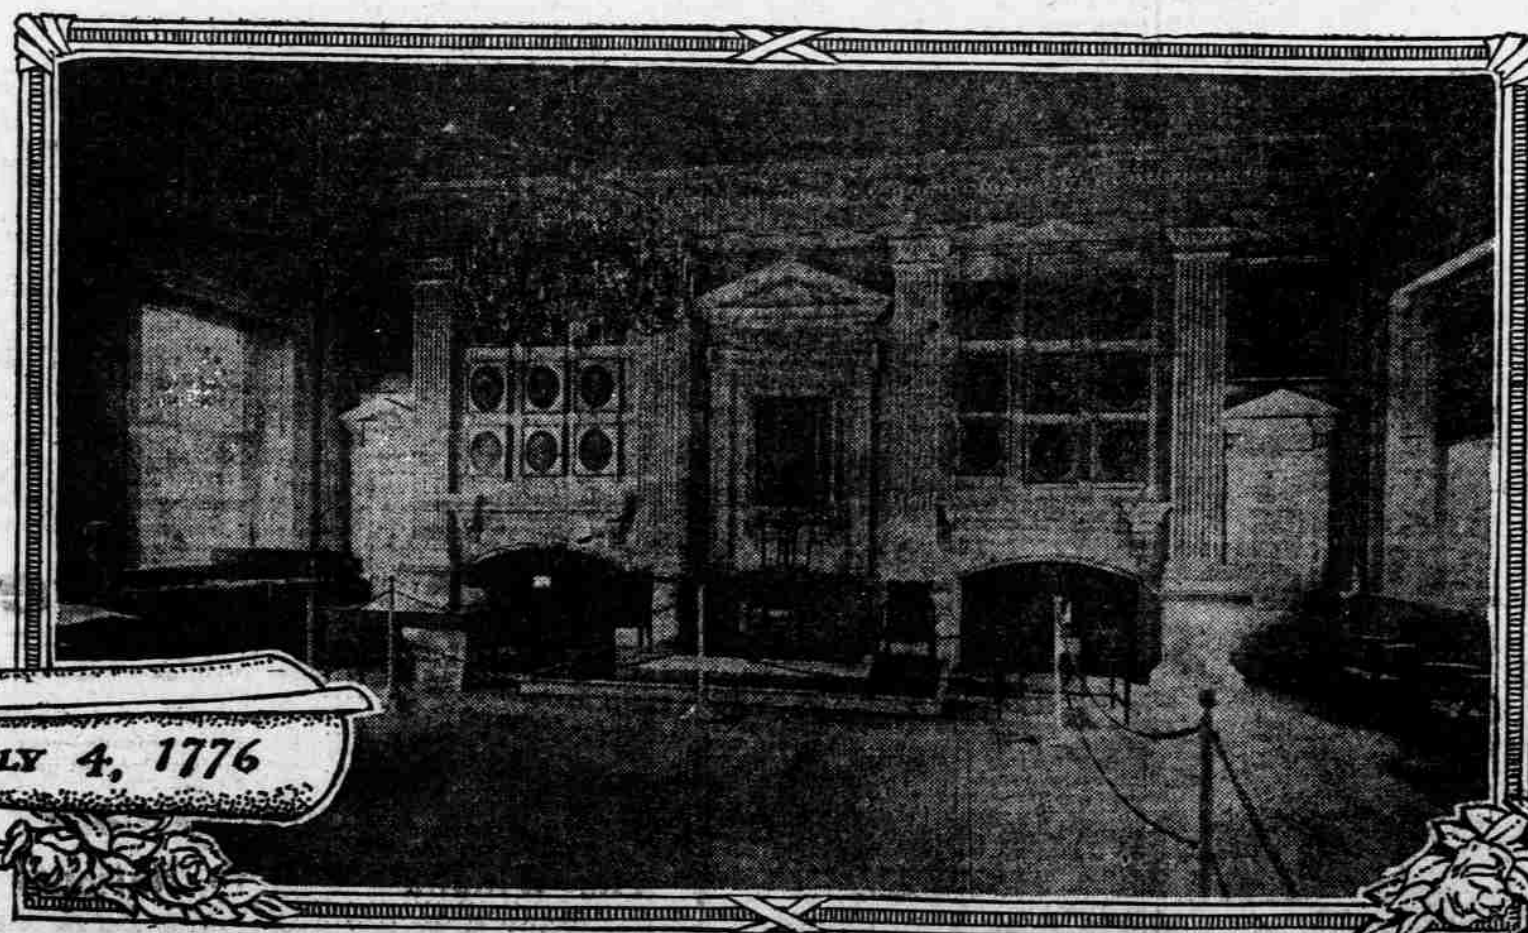

IS A VOTE FOR a protection wall to keep out poorly-paid-foreign-labor-products;

IS A VOTE FOR keeping up the industrial and financial strength of the Nation;

IS A VOTE FOR the insurance of continuous prosperity of American workers and American capital after the great war is ended.
